3 Reasons Education Students Should Study Abroad

1. Maximize opportunities for professional development. Studying abroad will give you knowledge of a different education system and a better understanding of the value that education has in different cultural contexts.

2. Learn another language. Navigating daily life in a foreign language gives you firsthand experience of the challenges inherent in language acquisition. And knowing another language allows you to connect with a greater number of people.

3. Enhance your cultural competence. Having an awareness of one’s own social identities and intersectionality, will inform teaching practices and foster inclusive classrooms.

Things To Consider

1. Plan around your teaching practicum. Is it better to go abroad during the summer rather than the semester? Can you take some general education courses abroad?

2. Is language proficiency one of your goals? Even if it’s not required by your major, knowing another language could make you a more competitive job candidate after graduation.

3. Do you want to take courses with local students? ISA offers a range of program options for students wishing to take courses with local students at all language levels.

FOUR STEPS to studying abroad

STEP 1  Start perusing
there’s no better time than right now

We know that everyone starts from somewhere different. If you’re:
• Dabbling—follow ISA on Instagram for inspiration: @isaabroad
• Debating—call 512-645-1469 and talk with an ISA Program Advisor.
• Deciding—as in deciding when and where—visit: studiesabroad.com

STEP 2  Start planning
as soon as possible or 12 months ahead of travel

This is when you’ll finalize where and when you want to go abroad. You’ll also want to work with your study abroad advisor to confirm that the classes you want to take will count toward your degree and better understand how credits are transferred.

STEP 3  Start preparing
4-8 months ahead of travel

There are a few things that you’ll need to knock out during this step, including applications for your program, financial aid, and your passport. This is also when you’ll book your flight, and it all starts to get real.

STEP 4  Start packing
4-6 weeks ahead of travel

It’s go time!
Your prep work is done—just leave some room in your suitcase for souvenirs. We’ll give you all the info you need as you’re getting ready to go.

Remember, our ISA Program Advisors are experts on everything study abroad—from choosing a program to finding the best local coffee shop. At every point in the process, they are ready to help you. Call 512-645-1469 or send us an email at programadvisors@studiesabroad.com.
