3 Reasons STEM Students Should Study Abroad

1. Learn to collaborate in multicultural contexts. STEM is global. By studying and living with people from different cultural backgrounds, you will learn how to become more tolerant of ambiguity, respectful of difference, and able recognize and find common ground.

2. Gain experience in problem solving. Living and studying in an unfamiliar environment will present challenges and you will gain confidence as you learn to solve them.

3. Discover new interests. Study abroad gives you an opportunity to take courses that are unavailable at your home university. Being in a new place and surrounded by new people is also a great way to be exposed to different ideas and perspectives.

Things To Consider

1. Do the courses you need to take have lab requirements? Can you arrange your schedule in such a way that permits you to take these courses at your home campus?

2. Are you required to take courses in a sequential order? If so, what courses would your department allow you to take abroad?

3. Do you want to take courses with local students? ISA offers a range of program options for students wishing to take courses with local students at all language levels.

What’s Next?

FOUR STEPS to studying abroad

STEP 1 Start perusing
there’s no better time than right now

We know that everyone starts from somewhere different. If you’re:

- Dabbling—follow ISA on Instagram for inspiration: @isaabroad
- Debating—call 512-645-1469 and talk with an ISA Program Advisor.
- Deciding—as in deciding when and where—visit: studiesabroad.com

STEP 2 Start planning
as soon as possible or 12 months ahead of travel

This is when you’ll finalize where and when you want to go abroad. You’ll also want to work with your study abroad advisor to confirm that the classes you want to take will count toward your degree and better understand how credits are transferred.

STEP 3 Start preparing
4-8 months ahead of travel

There are a few things that you’ll need to knock out during this step, including applications for your program, financial aid, and your passport. This is also when you’ll book your flight, and it all starts to get real.

STEP 4 Start packing
4-6 weeks ahead of travel

It’s go time!
Your prep work is done—just leave some room in your suitcase for souvenirs. We’ll give you all the info you need as you’re getting ready to go.

Remember, our ISA Program Advisors are experts on everything study abroad—from choosing a program to finding the best local coffee shop. At every point in the process, they are ready to help you. Call 512-645-1469 or send us an email at programadvisors@studiesabroad.com.
